

TELECULTURE: Dreams at the epicenter

“Nothing ‐ including ourselves ‐ can be defined intrinsically; we are all in some extrinsic and relational achievements, confluences of body, culture, environment, technology. Moreover, the predominance of televisual and imaging technologies in contemporary technoculture has meant that our visual tools become inseparable from what we might discern as our own perceptual and bodily boundaries as ‘access’ to the world.”

Codex, 2007
HD & SD video/ Jitter/ mac mini/ 24” Flat Screen ‐ Codex is a clearing house of video clips, audio sound bytes and textual pieces created but never finished since I moved to NYC in 2003. Through the use of a semi-random algorithm the narrative body flows through sorted sets and grouping of ideas, images and sounds that deal with fictional and non-fictional mini-narratives. The mini-narratives range from subjects concerning geography, technology, capitalism, socialism, political history, spiritualism, the occult, multiplicity, and direct observations of urban life on both broad and micro levels. "It's a movie that is never complete, never ending and never the same twice. It's about me, you and everything around us past present and future. Call it artful dodging by computational power, call it laziness, call it a hopeless but beautiful mess because who has time to sort out interrelated ideas, who has time for anything longer than 30 seconds? I don't, but the codex or rather algorithm does and can neatly sort it all out for us."

Chris Borkowski is a media maker from Buffalo, NY who is now living and working in New York City. He has worked professionally as video editor, network administrator, media arts center Technical Director, and University instructor in digital arts. He has shown work internationally at various galleries and media festivals and has also performed a number of real-time audio and video pieces. He likes sunsets and long walks in the park, the shape of pixels, social climbers, hackers, misfits and charlatans. His favorite colors are RGB and he finds name dropping and writing his own bio the biggest turn off. ----- Bethany Fancher

Construction and Deconstruction of the 43rd President, 2006 SD Video

Fancher questions her place and responsibility in relationship to America through her performance-based video installation, Construction and Deconstruction of the 43rd President. Her examination tool is Wonder Bread - the prototypical American industrially produced food product, as a symbolic gesture of her disgust at how we are marketed information devoid of any real substance.

Bethany Fancher currently lives and works in Queens, New York. Connection to the animal world combined with alienation from humankind in general with all its oppression, repression, and depression runs thematically through her work in video, performance, sculpture, photography, and painting. She attended the I-Park residency in East Haddam, Connecticut in 2001, the Jentel residency in Banner, Wyoming in 2004, the McColl Center for Visual Arts residency in Charlotte, North Carolina in 2005 and exhibits her work nationally and internationally. ----- Gerald Förster

Toddesschrei (Yvette), 2007 HD Video

Toddesschrei, Förster's latest video project, is a dark glimpse into the primal horror of modern existence. It is an expression of the inner anguish, fear, terror and grief that so many human beings experience. Resulting from spiritual isolation, physical obsolescence and socio-political impotence. The world is ironically bent on the denial of suffering, the denial of death and the obsessive veneration of power, wealth, youth and physical beauty.

Gerald Förster, winner of the "Fuji Press International Professional photographer Award 2006" was born in Germany in 1964. He graduated from his academic studies of photography in 1985 and has since worked professionally in Europe and the United States. He has contributed images to various publications throughout the world including Vogue, Premier, Esquire, and The New York Times Magazine among many others. Förster makes his home in New York City. ----- Taras Hrabowsky

Amalgamide Tide, 2006 HD Video

Hrabowski's projection is a conceptual blend of Niagara Falls, Tsunami waves, cloud systems, and tornadoes - consisting of thousands of digitally animated people. Amalgamide Tide questions the relationship between group consciousness and uncontrollable effects and consequences in nature. "We manufacture our own catastrophes for our euphoric entertainment."

Hrabowski, born in 1981 in Middletown, New York, received his BFA from Pratt Institute in 2002. His work explores a combination of mediums, including painting, installation, and projection environments that are displayed both publicly and privately. During the summer of 2007 Hrabowski showed Amalgamide Tide in 14 cities, projecting video in public from a specially modified van. He exhibited his work at Sensei Gallery and Artist Network in New York City and MCV/NYC in Brooklyn. He currently lives and works in Brooklyn, New York.

Sister City, 2007
4 channel digital animation

Sister City defines an individual's identity and internal evolution using a pair of narratives as a reference point. The narratives are set in two different worlds located in opposing universes. Both worlds contain two cities and a pair of sisters. These separate worlds are different representations of the same mind, parallel to the conscious and unconscious realms of the human brain. The cities symbolize two divergent personas within this mind and the sisters serve as vectors of interaction between them. This structure reveals a continuous process of mental division and conflict, representative of the psychological evolution that occurs throughout a lifetime.

Jennifer Jacobs is an emerging artist from Corvallis, Oregon and a recent graduate of the University of Oregon. Her work addresses the personal metamorphosis that results from our identification and daily interaction with the mechanical. Her pieces range from live productions to animation with interactive elements. She currently works and resides in New York City.

In Payson's electrifying new work Ghostplay, college football's raw beauty rises to the surface in photographs taken directly from the television screen; images morph into each other and expressions are magnified as they are frozen in time. Ghostplay examines the media that transmits it all, as the broadcasters and corporate sponsors appear as much a part of the game as the athletes and coaches. Interspersed with intrusive news bulletins, overeager cheerleaders, anxious spectators, and seemingly malicious data on the athletes' injuries, college football appears to be a forum for adolescent violence and pervasive adult greed. In these images, the game dissolves as the ghost in the machine of the American media is captured by Payson's camera. Ghostplay reveals the suspicion and intrigue lurking between the stadium seats, played out in the television control rooms, and hovering in the lower levels of our consciousness.

Eric Payson is a photographer and performance artist. Solo exhibitions of his photographs have been mounted at Galerie Bodo Niemann, Berlin and Rene Fotouhi, East Hampton, New York. Payson lives and works in New York and Tucson, Arizona. ----- Second Front

The Last Supper, 2007
Online VR performance and video

Second Front creates theatres of the absurd that challenge notions of virtual embodiment, online performance and the formation of virtual narrative. Taking their influences from numerous sources, including Dada, Fluxus, Futurist Syntesi, the Situationist International and contemporary performance artists like Laurie Anderson and Guillermo Gomez-Pena.

Second Front is the pioneering performance art group in the online avatar-based VR world, Second Life. Founded in 2006, Second Front quickly grew to its current 8 member troupe that includes Jeremy Owen Turner (Vancouver), Doug Jarvis (Victoria), Tanya Skuce (Vancouver), Gazira Babeli (Italy), Penny Leong Browne (Vancouver), Patrick Lichty (Chicago), Liz Solo (St. Johns) and Scott Kildall (San Francisco). Second Front has performed extensively, including Vancouver, Chicago, New York, and has been featured in publications including SLate, Eikon, Realtime Arts (Australia), The Avastar (published by Axel-Springer, Germany) and most recently in Exibart a(Italy).

The Port Huron Project, 2007

Digital Video

The Port Huron Project is a series of reenactments of protest speeches from the 1960s and '70s. Each event takes place at the site of the original speech, and is delivered by an actor to an audience of invited guests and passers-by. Videos of these performances are presented in various venues and distributed online (on YouTube, Blip.tv, and MySpace) and on DVD as open-source media (so others can view them, share them, or use them as found footage in other projects). The videos included in this exhibition document reenactments, staged in 2006 and 2007, of speeches originally given by Coretta Scott King (Central Park, 1968), author/activist Howard Zinn (Boston Common, 1971) and SDS President Paul Potter (National Mall, 1965).

Mark Tribe is an artist and curator whose interests include art, technology, and politics. His art work has been exhibited at the ZKM Center for Art and Media in Karlsruhe, the Ars Electronica Festival in Linz, and Gigantic Art Space in New York City. He has organized curatorial projects for the New Museum of Contemporary Art, MASS MoCA, and inSite_05. In 1996, he founded Rhizome.org, an online resource for new media artists. He teaches at Brown University, and is the co-author, with Reena Jana, of New Media Art (Taschen, 2006). He splits his time between Providence and New York City.

data ECOSystems .HybridEntertainmentMatrix, 2007

multi channel iPod video sculpture

[dNASAb]'s data ECOSystems explore the possible aesthetics of wireless data and critique the fetishization of technology through photography, drawing, painting, and assemblage sculpture. Informed by the integration of art installation, sound, and technology, [dNASAb]'s work is richly intricate and visually stunning, each piece suggesting a "visual network" formed from explosions of mass communication graffiti.

[dNASAb] received a BFA in Sculpture and in Mixed Media from Florida State University in 1994. He was selected by Cindy Sherman, Jack Pierson, and Adam Fuss for Unframed First Look 2004, a juried salon for emerging artists at the Sean Kelly Gallery in New York. In March 2005, the artist was a winner in The Los Angeles Center For Digital Art's international competition for photography and digital artists. He has exhibited and has collaborated extensively in new media art installations, interactive multimedia projects, and art performances in New York and internationally since 1997. The artist lives and works in Brooklyn, New York.

About the curator
